Session Description

Instructional leadership is a significant factor in facilitating, improving, and promoting the academic progress of students. Dozens of characteristics have been identified from research studies on school improvement and instructional leader effectiveness, including high expectations of students and teachers, an emphasis on instruction, provision of professional development, and use of data and feedback to evaluate students' progress.

In this highly interactive and engaging session, participants will examine the most contemporary research available about specific leadership behaviors that have the greatest influence on student achievement. This includes promoting and participating in teacher learning and development, and possessing the knowledge, skills, and principles to have an unmistakably positive impact on students and teachers.

Session Outcomes

- Retooling your collaborative leadership profile through collective efficacy and Achievement Teams
- Create an effective leadership profile
- Create an effective teacher profile
- Determine teacher and leadership impact through the calculation of effect size and use this information to evaluate overall growth and progress
- Calculate your school/district collective efficacy score using the Collective Efficacy Scale (CE-SCALE) developed by Wayne K. Hoy, Fawcett Professor Emeritus in Educational Administration, The Ohio State University
